

The Impact of Immigration on Housing

The coalition government have now confirmed that, according to the current official projections, immigration is likely to account for nearly 40% of household formation in the next 23 years - an average of very nearly 100,000 households a year. We already have a housing crisis with one and three quarter million families on Local Authorities waiting lists in England. We also have the worst financial crisis for at least a generation. The case for getting immigration into line with emigration - Balanced Migration - has never been stronger.
